In its Introduction to Hate Crimes concluded that News about alleged hate crimes appears in the media almost daily, but most cases are not cases of hate speech and the creation of a real danger to the groups or persons referred to in Articles 22. 4th, and Art. 510 and others of the Penal Code. This serves to enable those who are opposed to a particular punishment of hate crimes to speak of a restriction of freedom of expression and an extension of the repression of any opinion through criminal law. However, in recent years there has been no significant increase in procedures, let alone sentences, concerning real hate crimes. On the contrary, the international bodies, the United Nations, the European Community, through its institutions, CERD, FRA, ECRI, etc. continue to be interested in an effective investigation and punishment of this type of behavior. The data were recorded according to the following criteria: Threats to specific groups (Art. 170.1); Discrimination in employment (Art. 314); Public provocation to hatred/violence/discrimination (Art. 510.1); Acts of humiliation or justification of crimes (Art. 510.2); Denial of benefits (Arts. 511-512); Illicit association for discrimination (Art. 515.4); Against religious feelings (Arts. 522-525); Against moral integrity (Art. 173.1); Aggravated offences (Art. 22.4a); Others.
