EUROPEAN UNION AGENCY
FOR FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union is the EU's bill of human rights. It contains 50 articles with substantive rights and principles, followed by four articles with general provisions. Member States have a duty to respect the rights and observe the principles of the Charter whenever they are acting within the scope of binding EU law. Where the Charter provisions are sufficiently precise and unconditional, they can have a direct effect at the national level – for instance in national courtrooms. Charter provisions that are 'principles' can only be invoked before a court if implemented by legislative or executive acts.

Member States have an explicit duty to promote the Charter's application. This country-sheet supports that effort by giving examples of the Charter's use and highlighting how it adds value.

The EU Charter as an obligation: when are Danish authorities required to apply it?

- ★ Given that EU law is predominantly implemented at national level, national judges, parliamentarians, government officials and legal practitioners are core 'Charter agents' on whom the EU system relies.
- ★ The EU Charter of Fundamental Rights primarily addresses the EU itself. It binds EU Member States "only when they are implementing Union law" (Article 51 of the Charter). However, a significant part of national law- and policymaking is directly or indirectly influenced by EU law. Wherever a legislative file, a judicial case or factual situation falls within the scope of binding EU law, the EU Charter applies and can be used by and invoked before national authorities.
- ★ It is not always easy to draw the borders of the Charter's field of application. The question of whether the Charter applies is central to the proper implementation of EU law. FRA's handbook on Applying the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union in law and policymaking at national level provides some guidance on this issue.

How is the Charter used in Denmark?

All EU Member States apply the EU Charter – but not always to its full potential. The Charter is sometimes referred to in the context of upcoming legislation or debates in parliaments. National authorities and courts also sometimes refer to the Charter in their decisions and rulings. Examples from Denmark include:

★ National legislation: respect for private and family life (Article 7), protection of personal data (Article 8), scope and interpretation of rights and principles (Article 51)

In 2015, when the Danish Security Intelligence Service Act and Customs Act were amended, the person who proposed the bill noted the risk of interference with Articles 7 and 8 of the Charter, but added that this risk was justified and in line with Article 52 of the Charter.

★ Parliamentary debate: general reference to the EU Charter

In 2016, a parliamentary resolution on strengthening data protection recommended linking the Danish Data Protection Agency more closely to parliament and quoted the Danish Council of Digital Security: “[It] does not believe that the Data Protection Agency with its current location under the Ministry of Justice meets the requirement of independence as set out in, for example, the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights”.

★ National courts: respect for private and family life (Article 7) and protection of personal data (Article 8)

A 2016 case (Case 236/2014) concerned an applicant who argued that the obligation under national law to label his letterbox with his full name was against the rights enshrined in Article 7 and Article 8 of the EU Charter. The High Court concluded that this was not a context where the Member State was implementing EU law in the sense of Article 51 of the Charter. Explicitly referring to the cases of Fransson (C-617/10) and Siragusa (C-206/13), the national court underlined that the concept of ‘implementing EU law’ requires a certain degree of connection above and beyond the matter covered by the relevant national law being closely related to EU law.

The Danish constitution

The Constitutional Act of Denmark

- ★ It was originally adopted in 1849 and most recently revised in 1953.
- ★ It contains 89 sections, 12 of which cover fundamental rights, including a set of rights of which two grant socio-economic rights in the form of access to education and help for the unemployed.

The constitution, the EU Charter and the ECHR

- ★ The constitution does not explicitly refer to the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights, EU primary law or the European Convention of Human Rights.

The Charter's added value

The Charter is a legally binding document. It includes civil and political rights as well as economic, social and cultural rights. Moreover, it benefits from the strength of EU law, which often has direct effect and, in principle and unlike international law, must be granted supremacy over national law. However, in many contexts it may not be possible to directly invoke the Charter – for instance, because the respective Charter provision is a principle and not a right and was not implemented by a legislative or executive act; or is otherwise not directly applicable; or does not apply at all because the case at hand falls outside the scope of EU law. In any case, the Charter increases the visibility of rights. It explicitly spells out rights and principles that are often not expressly laid out in other international human rights documents, such as the ECHR (as shown in Figure 1). Unlike the Council of Europe's European Social Charter, the EU Charter does not offer the possibility to be bound only by selected provisions; Member States are bound by all of its provisions.

Given the breadth of rights explicitly covered by the Charter, it can help to increase the visibility of rights at national level. Moreover, national courts do sometimes use the Charter to interpret or further develop national law, even outside the scope of EU law.

When comparing the Charter with the constitutions of EU Member States, it becomes evident that the text of the Charter is often more explicit about certain rights. For example, in Denmark, many Charter rights appear not to be fully mirrored in national constitutional law – for instance, human dignity (Article 1), right to life (Article 2), right to the integrity of the person (Article 3),

- No ECHR equivalent
- More extensive than ECHR
- Equivalent protection to ECHR
- EU context-specific

Note: The figure is based on the Explanations on the Charter and a textual comparison of the two documents in order to show how the Charter increases the visibility of entitlements (some of the rights not explicitly contained in the ECHR are covered by the case law, which however is less visible to a non-expert).

prohibition of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (Article 4), prohibition of slavery and forced labour (Article 5), protection of personal data (Article 8), right to marry and right to found a family (Article 9), freedom of the arts and sciences (Article 13), cultural, religious and linguistic diversity (Article 22), rights of the child (Article 24), rights of the elderly (Article 25), integration of persons with disabilities (Article 25), workers' right to information and consultation within the undertaking (Article 27), right to collective bargaining and action (Article 28), right of access to placement services (Article 29), protection in the event of unjustified dismissal (Article 30), fair and just working conditions (Article 31), prohibition of child labour and protection of young people at work (Article 32), family and professional life (Article 33), access to services of general economic interest (Article 36), environmental protection (Article 37), consumer protection (Article 38), right to good administration (Article 41), right to access of documents (Article 42), presumption of innocence and right to defence (Article 48), principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties (Article 49) and the right not to be tried or punished twice for the same criminal offence (Article 50).

The absence of certain rights from a constitutional text by no means implies that they are not protected by the legal order. However, explicit guarantees in a constitutional text make these rights more visible and so also more accessible. In this sense, the Charter can strengthen less well-known rights.

Figure 2: Does the Charter add to the visibility of rights? Comparing the Charter and national constitutions

Number of EU Member States that do not have equivalent/explicit provisions for this Article in their constitutional texts

Note: The figure is based on a textual comparison of the Charter and written constitutional law of the EU Member States (excluding the United Kingdom) in order to show under which provisions the Charter is most likely to increase the visibility of entitlements. EU-specific entitlements (the Charter provisions that are in Figure 1 marked in pale yellow) were considered as reflected in national constitutions if a comparable provision could be identified (for instance a constitutional provision concerning a national Ombudsperson).

The EU Charter of Fundamental Rights: a young instrument

- ★ A European Convention drafted the Charter. The Convention was composed of 15 representatives of the then 15 EU Member States, 46 parliamentarians (16 members of the European Parliament and 30 members of national parliaments), and one European Commission representative. The Convention also consulted civil society.
- ★ The European Parliament, the European Commission and the Council of the EU solemnly proclaimed the Charter in December 2000.
- ★ With the entry into force of the Lisbon Treaty on 1 December 2009, the Charter became legally binding. It is a relatively new legal instrument that is increasingly used at national level.
