	Young Jewish Europeans: perceptions and experiences of antisemitism July 2019	Based on FRA's second large-scale survey on experiences and perceptions of antisemitism, this report focuses on the perspectives of young Jewish Europeans (aged 16-34) living in twelve EU Member States. It first describes this particular group and takes a look at defining antisemitism and understanding the place of Israel in it.	en
	Migration: Key fundamental rights concerns - Quarterly bulletin 3 July 2019	FRA has been regularly collecting data on migration since September 2015. This report focuses on the fundamental rights situation of people arriving in Member States and EU candidate countries particularly affected by migration movements. It addresses fundamental rights concerns between 1 April and 30 June 2019.	en
	Second European Union Minorities and Discrimination Survey - Migrant women - selected findings September 2019	The main EU-MIDIS II findings, published in 2017, pointed to a number of differences in the way women and men with immigrant backgrounds across the EU experience how their rights are respected. This report summarises some of the most relevant survey findings in this regard, which show the need for targeted, gender-sensitive measures.	en
	Returning unaccompanied children: fundamental rights considerations Paper September 2019	Individuals who are not entitled to stay in the EU are typically subject to being returned to their home countries. This includes children who are not accompanied by their parents or by another primary caregiver. But returning such children, or finding another durable solution, is a delicate matter, and doing so in full compliance with fundamental rights protections can be difficult. This focus paper therefore aims to help national authorities involved in return-related tasks, including child-protection services, to ensure full rights compliance.	en
	Rights in practice: access to a lawyer and procedural rights in criminal and European arrest warrant proceedings September 2019	Protecting the rights of anyone suspected or accused of a crime is an essential element of the rule of law. Courts, prosecutors and police officers need certain powers to enforce the law – but trust in the outcomes of their efforts will quickly erode without effective safeguards. Such safeguards take on various forms, and include the right to certain information and to a lawyer.	en

	Antisemitism - Overview of data available in the European Union 2008-2018 November 2019	This annual overview provides an update of the most recent figures on antisemitic incidents, covering the period 1 January 2008 – 31 December 2018, across the EU Member States, where data are available. It includes a section that presents evidence from international organisations. In addition, for the first time, it provides an overview of how Member States that have adopted or endorsed the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance’s non-legally binding working definition of antisemitism use or intend to use it. en
	The EU Charter of Fundamental Rights on its 10th anniversary: views of civil society and national human rights institutions Paper November 2019	The Charter is most effective when parliaments, governments and courts at local, regional and national levels all actively apply it. The national sphere is particularly relevant. Civil society organisations and national human rights institutions are crucial to letting the Charter unfold its potential at this level. But, 10 years after it became legally binding, the Charter’s potential is not being fully realised, this paper underscores. en
	Being Black in the EU - Summary November 2019	Across the EU, people of African descent face widespread and entrenched prejudice and exclusion. Racial discrimination and harassment are commonplace. Experiences with racist violence vary, but reach as high as 14 %. Discriminatory profiling by the police is a common reality. Hurdles to inclusion are multi-faceted, particularly when it comes to looking for jobs and housing. en fr de da fi it mt pt sv
	Integration of young refugees in the EU: good practices and challenges November 2019	Over 2.5 million people applied for international protection in the 28 EU Member States in 2015 and 2016. Many of those who were granted some form of protection are young people, who are likely to stay and settle in the EU. FRA interviewed some of them, as well as professionals working with them in 15 locations across six EU Member States. This report presents the results of FRA’s research, focusing on young people between the ages of 16 and 24. en

	Child rights in the EU - Supporting you, Supporting them November 2019 Child rights come first. Measures to ensure child protection and participation apply to all children in the EU. This brochure guides you to relevant FRA reports and tools that can support you when promoting and protecting the rights of all children in the EU.	en
	Facial recognition technology: fundamental rights considerations in the context of law enforcement Paper November 2019 Facial recognition technology (FRT) makes it possible to compare digital facial images to determine whether they are of the same person. Comparing footage obtained from video cameras (CCTV) with images in databases is referred to as 'live facial recognition technology'. Examples of national law enforcement authorities in the EU using such technology are sparse – but several are testing its potential. This paper therefore looks at the fundamental rights implications of relying on live FRT, focusing on its use for law enforcement and border-management purposes.	en
	Business-related human rights abuse reported in the EU and available remedies Paper December 2019 Growing global efforts to encourage responsible business conduct that respects human rights include steps to ensure access to effective remedies when breaches occur. In 2017, the European Commission asked FRA to collect evidence on such access in the EU Member States. FRA's resulting research involved desk research on different incidents of abuse; and interview-based fieldwork on professionals' views on the availability and effectiveness of different complaint avenues. This paper presents preliminary findings from the first phase of the research.	en

	Criminal detention conditions in the European Union: rules and reality December 2019 This report looks at five core aspects of detention conditions: the size of cells; the amount of time detainees can spend outside of these cells, including outdoors; sanitary conditions; access to healthcare; and whether detainees are protected from violence. For each of these, the report summarises the minimum standards at international and European levels. It then looks at how these standards are translated into national laws and other rules of the EU Member States. The report also presents an overview of how these rules play out in practice according to the findings of existing National Preventive Mechanisms.	en
