1.1 Developments unrelated to the COVID-19 pandemic

1.1.1 Academic Freedom

a) Central European University (CEU)

The judgment rendered on 6 October 2020 by the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) in Case C-66/18, Commission v Hungary deems the conditions introduced by Hungary in relation to foreign higher education institutions intending to carry out their activities in its territory, incompatible with EU law. The CJEU found that these conditions made the exercise of teaching activities leading to a qualification by higher education institutions situated outside the European Economic Area (EEA) subject to the existence of an international treaty between Hungary and the third country in which the institution concerned has its seat. In the CJEU’s view, Hungary violated its obligations to ensure national treatment in accordance with the provisions of the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS), which prohibits discrimination between imported and domestically produced goods with respect to internal taxation or other government regulation. The CJEU also considered the said requirements contrary to academic freedom, the freedom to found higher education institutions and the freedom to conduct a business ensured by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. Furthermore, by making the exercise of the activities of foreign higher education institutions, including institutions with their seat in another Member State of the EEA, subject to the condition that they offer higher education in the country in which they have their seat, Hungary – besides violating its national treatment commitments under the GATS - also violated its obligations as to the freedom of establishment and the free movement of services under EU law.

2 Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU), Case C-66/18, Commission v Hungary, 6 October 2020.

The conditions found incompatible with EU law requirements were introduced by Act XXV of 2017 on the modification of Act CCIV of 2011 on national higher education. The alleged reason for adopting the amendments, which primarily consisted of the reform of the licensing regime applicable to foreign higher education institutions, was to guarantee the quality of higher education teaching activities. Regardless of their former recognition, higher education institutions had to fulfil new requirements, including the ones examined by the CJEU. The amendment primarily targeted CEU, which – after unsuccessful attempts to engage in negotiations and accommodate the new requirements, finally transferred the centre of its educational activities to Vienna. A constitutional complaint concerning CEU was submitted in 2018 with the Constitutional Court (Alkotmánybíróság, hereinafter: CC) but to date no decision was rendered by the CC.

b) The case of the University of Theatre and Film Arts and other universities

Act LXXII of 2020 on the Theatre and Film Arts Foundation and on transferring property to the Theatre and Film Arts Foundation and Theatre and Film Arts University (hereinafter: Act LXXII of 2020) transferred the ownership of the University of Theatre and Film Arts (Színház és Filmművészeti Egyetem, hereinafter: UTFA) to a newly set up private foundation, the Theatre and Film Arts Foundation (Színház- és Filmművészetért Alapítvány, hereinafter: TFA Foundation). A board of five trustees – including the director of the National Theatre (Nemzeti Színház) and executive members of the Hungarian Oil and Gas

Industry Plc. (Magyar Olaj és Gázipari Részvénytársaság)\textsuperscript{11} – was appointed by the government, while all members proposed by the university were rejected.\textsuperscript{12} In regard to this, the Ministry of Technology and Innovation (Innovációs és Technológiai Minisztérium, hereinafter: MTI)\textsuperscript{13} claimed that human resource-related decisions are taken on the basis of “professional, higher education and artistic factors” with the “involvement of higher education partners when necessary”, without giving any specific reasons to support its selection of the board trustees in question.\textsuperscript{14}

The board of trustees then claimed for itself all rights formerly vested with the senate of the university,\textsuperscript{15} which is made possible in the case of privately maintained higher education institutions by – among others – Article 94 (6) of Act CCVI of 2011 on national higher education (hereinafter: Act CCVI of 2011).\textsuperscript{16} This latter provision allows private higher education institution maintainers to vindicate in the institution’s founding memorandum several rights that, otherwise, would be exercised by the senate: the adoption of the budget, of the annual budgetary report and of the organisational and operational regulations, or the call for proposals for the position of the rector. According to the legal representatives of the UTFA, the fact that Act CCVI of 2011 makes it possible for maintainers of private higher education institutions to render meaningless the rights of the senate, raises constitutional concerns. This is all the more so as, under Article 12 (1)-(2) of the same act, the senate would be the leading body of higher education institutions upon whom the related constitutional rights of higher education institutions, including academic freedom, are bestowed.\textsuperscript{17} They found this particularly troubling as, in the past few years, after imposing chancellors responsible for their economic management upon universities, a number of former state universities were “handed over”, with considerable public property and immense financial support, to “private” foundations similar to the TFA Foundation. At the same time, members loyal to the government and/or with no related professional background were placed by the government onto the board of trustees of these private foundations. The legal representatives of the UTFA also deem this as a further form of occupation or control by the government of the formerly autonomous sector of higher education.\textsuperscript{18} Legislative acts ensuring the handing over of six universities\textsuperscript{19} to private foundations (according to the MTI: “public utility property foundations” (közfeladatot ellátó közérdekű vagyonkezelői alapítvány, which are, however, regarded as a non-state maintainer)\textsuperscript{20} were also adopted by the Parliament in 2020. There are further plans for handing over other universities as well to such foundations.\textsuperscript{21} The MTI maintained that there are 18 state-run higher education institutions left in Hungary,\textsuperscript{22} while eight higher education institutions were handed over to “public utility property foundations” (including the six universities mentioned above). Moreover, the MTI does not see constitutional concerns as to Article 94 of Act CCVI of 2011, and considers it as a possibility to provide for the “different regulation” of the various maintainers of higher education institutions, such as churches.\textsuperscript{23} Furthermore, in the opinion of the MTI, academic freedom is not allocated by the Fundamental Law (Alaptörvény) onto certain bodies of the higher education institutions but onto the institutions as a whole.\textsuperscript{24}

In August 2020, the management of the UTFA resigned in protest over the imposition of a government-appointed board and the infringement of the rights of the formerly autonomous senate of TFA. The university’s senate maintained that it had been deprived of its right to decide on budgetary, organisational and staff issues. Leading theatre directors and professors resigned from their teaching positions, while other professors decided to go on strike as of 1 October 2020.25 Representatives of UTFA gave account of the developments in the European Parliament's Culture and Education Committee on 27 October 2020.26 Representatives of the UTFA also maintained that – in view of, for instance the *Berlington vs. Hungary case (2015)*27 – their case has an EU law connection, considering that the UTFA accepts and hosts (even at present) students arriving from EU Member States e.g. within the framework of EU level student exchange programmes (some 1000 students so far) and also participated in joint academic programmes within the framework of the European Universities Initiative.28

The board of trustees and the newly nominated chancellor refused to engage in meaningful dialogue with the strike committee, instead they repeatedly filed complaints with the competent courts to establish the illegality of the strike. This resulted in a series of judicial decisions29, but ultimately the Municipal Court established the lawfulness of the strike30 and this was reinforced at second instance by the Municipal Court of Appeal on 30 November 2020.31

In line with this, protests began to protect academic freedom, and students blockaded the main buildings of the university (refusing to let the new leadership enter), whilst continuing to attend their classes. The students defied orders from the board of trustees and the new chancellor, which aimed to end the blockade and to suspend and invalidate the ongoing university semester. In an attempt to end the blockade, the new chancellor has also shut down internet access, closed schoolrooms\textsuperscript{32} and initiated unsuccessful action for an injunction to prevent a nuisance of property against the president of the UTFA Student Council.\textsuperscript{33}

Around 130 students and professors of the UTFA also filed a constitutional complaint in October 2020 with the Constitutional Court (CC) against Act LXXII of 2020\textsuperscript{34} in protection of academic autonomy and academic freedom. Though the complainants asked for an urgent procedure and a constitutional judge was designated to the case on 26 October 2020, no further steps have yet been taken by the CC. The legal representative of the complainants emphasised that there is no deadline for the CC to render its decision. On the other hand, following the \textit{Mendrei vs Hungary} (2018) case\textsuperscript{35}, the European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter: ECtHR) considers the constitutional complaint procedures initiated against legislative acts as “effective” remedy under the European Convention of Human Rights, which makes it difficult for the complainants to turn to the Strasbourg court.\textsuperscript{36} In spite of this, the complainants plan to take the case to the ECtHR in 2021.\textsuperscript{37} In January 2021, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe adopted \textit{Resolution 2352 (2020) Threats to academic freedom and autonomy of higher education institutions in Europe}, which specifically called upon – among others – Hungary “to take immediate action to reverse the recently adopted legislation and/or practices that limit the respect of principles of academic freedom and institutional autonomy.”\textsuperscript{38}

A complaint was also filed with the Office of the Commissioner for Educational Rights (Oktatási Jogok Biztosának hivatala, hereinafter: OCER) and with the Office of Education (Oktatási Hivatal). On 14 November 2020, the Office of Education refused to acknowledge the client status of the community of students of the UTFA, so they decided to initiate administrative judicial proceedings against the Office of Education. On the other hand, on 27 November 2020, the OCER established in his interim/partial report, on the basis of the documentation produced by the students and teachers, that education is conducted within the institution in line with the legal requirements and that the appointed board of trustees had no legal basis for hindering or suspending the semester. The OCER also called upon the board to fulfil their tasks in line with legal requirements and to respect the constitutional rights of students. The report emphasised that it is the duty of the state to ensure for students admitted to the university the freedom of education, as prescribed by Article X (1) and (3) of the Fundamental Law and the operation of the university. The report established that the suspension of education is not in line with the legally set purpose of the board of trustees (which is to ensure the operation of the institution and education) and severely harms the fundamental rights related to the freedom of education/learning of students and the freedom of education/teaching of teachers. However, the reports of the OCER are non-binding and have not yet been taken into consideration by the government or the board of trustees of the TFA Foundation.

Instead, Government Decree 522/2020. (XI. 25.) on certain rules relating to higher education during the period of state of danger (hereinafter: GD 522/2020

(XI.25) gave further powers to the maintainers of higher education institutions during the state of danger proclaimed by the Government on 3 November 2020. On the basis of Article 1 of GD 522/2020 (XI. 25), the maintainers of higher education institutions may establish, after informing the Office of Education, that due to reasons related to public health, public safety, natural disaster or an unavertable situation directly jeopardising the order of the semester and student’s rights (extraordinary situation), the legal requirements for the recognition of the educational duties are not fulfilled, may not be ensured and may not be controlled by the maintainer. Filing a judicial complaint with suspensory effect against this decision is not possible and the decision takes effect immediately unless the court grants interim protection. Due to such a decision, the students lose their credits for the semester concerned. GD 522/2020 (XI.25) took effect on 26 November 2020, on the basis of which, the board of trustees suspended the education at UTFA on 28 November 2020. Despite court decisions declaring the suspension of the semester unlawful (as it would cause irreversible damage to the students of the UTFA, and, even if related judicial processes are won, the students could not be effectively remedied) the board of trustees attempted repeatedly to suspend and annul the semester, which, ultimately, proved to be unsuccessful. In January 2021, there were around 13 ongoing legal proceedings related to the situation of UTFA. According to updates provided by the UTFA Student Council in February 2021, the Municipal Court suspended its judicial proceedings and turned to the Constitutional Court requesting the examination of the constitutionality of GD 522/2020 (XI.25), and in a separate judicial referral, the examination of the constitutionality of Article 94 (6) of the Act LXXII of 2020. In the case of such judicial referrals, the Constitutional Court has 90 days to render a decision.

In response to a public data request on the possible concrete steps which the MTI may plan to take in order to restore the legal operation of the TFA Foundation and the UTFA in view of the related court judgments and the findings of the OCER, the MTI maintained, in general, that it “ensures the conditions of legal operation and – at the same time – also demands these from higher education institutions.” However, it did not comment specifically on the case of UTFA.

1.1.2 Foreign funding of NGOs

In June 2020, the CJEU’s judgment rendered in Case C-78/18, Commission v Hungary established that Act LXXVI of 2017 on the transparency of organisations which receive support from abroad (Articles 1-4; hereinafter Act LXXVI of 2017), was not in compliance with EU law. In order to increase transparency and fight money-laundering, Act LXXVI of 2017 obliged NGOs receiving “foreign funding” over 7.2 million forints (€21,615) per year from abroad to register and label themselves as foreign-funded organisations or face sanctions. These NGOs were also obliged to list foreign sponsors giving them more than 500,000 forints (€1,500) annually. Related NGOs, such as the Hungarian Helsinki Committee (Magyar Helsinki Bizottság, HHC) and the Hungarian Civil Liberties Union.

However, the press soon reported the case of the Power of Humanity Foundation (Emberség Erejével Alapítvány), hereinafter: PHF), which was formerly attacked by FIDESZ politicians for being a “Soros Centre”. also refused to register itself as a foreign-funded NGO. The Power of Humanity Foundation submitted a grant application requesting about 72,000 Euro under the EU Erasmus+ support programme coordinated and supervised by the Tempus Public Foundation (Tempus Közalapítvány) in Hungary. During the application process, in August 2020, the Tempus Public Foundation demanded that PHF to fulfil an “extra condition” in view of the original call for proposal and certify their compliance with the transparency criteria set by Act LXXVI of 2017. As the PHF refused to do so, relying among others on the related CJEU judgment, they were excluded from the grants. PHF submitted a letter of complaint, to which the Tempus Foundation responded that, in their view, despite the relevant CJEU ruling, Act LXXVI of 2017 is still in force.

In relation to this case, the HHC remarked that, until 2020, Act LXXVI of 2017 was not put in practice in Hungary, and it seems that, instead of revoking or amending the provisions deemed unlawful by the CJEU, the application in practice of the related provisions has started after the CJEU judgment. Therefore, at present, the HHC (Hungarian Helsinki Committee) and the HCLU (Hungarian Civil Liberties Union) do not see the prospect of a change without further EU implementation measures. The HCLU had a concurring opinion on the possible impact of the

1.2 COVID-19 - related developments

General background

NGOs repeatedly warned that, after the announcement of the lockdown due to the Coronavirus pandemic between March - June 2020 on the basis of Government Decree 40/2020 (III. 11) on the announcement of the state of danger (hereinafter: GD 40/2020 (III. 11.)), and as of November 2020, on the basis of Government Decree 478/2020. (XI. 3.) on the declaration of state of danger (hereinafter: GD 478/2020. (XI. 3.), the government used the possibilities of the special legal regime to strengthen its control over civil society by introducing a series of measures and legislative amendments, which were unrelated to the pandemic. These measures included, among others, restrictions on freedom of assembly, freedom of speech, and on the right to access public information (see in detail below), the amendment of the rules on election or GD 522/2020 (XI.25), making possible for private higher education institution maintainers to suspend the semester (see in detail above). The NGOs also claimed that the 9th Amendment of the Fundamental Law\textsuperscript{73} further stigmatised LGBTIQ communities\textsuperscript{74}, and the amendment of the rules of adoption practically excluded LGBTIQ parents\textsuperscript{75}.

1.2.1 Restrictions on freedom of assembly

During the lockdown due to the Coronavirus pandemic, freedom of assembly was restricted in Hungary between March- June 2020 on the basis of GD 40/2020 (III. 11.) and as of November 2020, on the basis of GD 478/2020. (XI. 3.).

Article 4 of GD 40/2020 prohibited the participation in any event or assembly irrespective of its location and the number of participants. Religious gatherings, marriages and funerals were exempted from the general rule. Similarly, Article 5 (1) of Government Decree 484/2020. (XI. 10.) on the second phase of protective measures applicable during the period of state of danger\textsuperscript{76} prohibits, in general, the holding of any assembly or the participation in any assembly apart from e.g. family gatherings, funerals, marriages held with a restricted number of participants.

The HHC and the HCLU turned to the Office of the Commissioner for Fundamental Rights (\textit{Alapvető jogok Biztosának Hivatala})\textsuperscript{77} in October 2020, claiming that the restrictions introduced on freedom of assembly and the police measures taken in relation to the subsequent assemblies, were excessive, disproportionate and not in compliance with the right to assembly. They criticised, in particular, the general, sweeping nature of the restrictions instead of applying or prescribing, in view of the pandemic, security measures on a case by case basis, adapted to the demonstrations in question (such as the obligation of appropriate social distancing). Reference has been made to the series of six “tooting” car-assemblies that were held at Clark Ádám square in spring in protest against the emptying of hospitals where participants received grossly disproportionate fines for sounding their car horns and circling around (for one such offence 120,000 forints (330 euros) were imposed, while for two such offences 1,250,000 forints (3,500 euros)). The HHC and HCLU claim that these intimidating fines led to the suspension of the series of demonstrations violating the freedom of assembly and freedom of speech of the participants concerned.

The HHC represented four journalists in cases where the police took measures to hinder their work during demonstrations, and, in two of these cases, the courts have reiterated the journalists’ right to report on demonstrations in 2020. The HHC maintained that, at present, they provide legal representation or counselling to around 13 clients involved in cases related to the restrictions on freedom of assembly. Out of these, seven cases were related to the so called “tooting” car assemblies. Similarly, the HHC took to the Curia (Supreme Court) the case of the prohibition of the car-demonstration organised by the Budapest Pride organisation on 10 December 2020. The Budapest Pride, representing the LGBTIQ community, intended to protest against the adoption of the 9th Amendment of the Fundamental Law, as it introduced further provisions into the Constitution which the organisers felt would further stigmatise the LGBTIQ community. They also intended to demonstrate against the amendments to the regulation of adoption, which practically excluded single parents, making adoption impossible for members of the LGBTIQ community, who are barred from the possibility of marriage.

1.2.2 Restrictions on freedom of speech and access to information

Article 2 of Government Decree 179/2020 (V. 4.) on the deviation from certain public data request regulations during the state of danger (in view of the state of danger declared by GD 40/2020 for the period March – June 2020), and Article 1 of Government Decree 521/2020 (XI. 25) on the deviation from certain public data request regulations during the state of danger (in view of the state of danger declared by GD 478/2020, applicable since November 2020) restricted the possibilities of submitting public data requests to authorities. Under the new rules, public data requests may not be submitted orally. Furthermore, instead of 15 days, the authority handling or possessing the required data has 45 days to respond, which may be prolonged once for another 45 days if the accomplishment of the data request would “endanger the fulfilment of public tasks related to the state of danger”. The HHC remarked that, in their view, the vague formulation of this latter provision and the opportunity to use it as a convenient pretext not to respond in due time, may seriously hinder the access to information, and has already made it very difficult for them to obtain public information in a timely manner. In this regard, the HCLU emphasised the impossibility to receive timely information from the National Health Centre (Nemzeti Népegészségügyi Vizsgáló Intézet - HHC) and the National Institute for Public Health (Naciónális Egészségügyi Intézet - NÉI) celebrating a football victory is legal, so is it as protest’ (Ha lagzín vagy focisikert ünnepelve lehet dudálni, akkor tiltakozásképpen is szabad), 10 June 2020, available at: https://www.helsinki.hu/ha-lagz-in-vagy-focisikert-unnepelve-lehet-dudalni-akkor-tiltakozaskeppen-is-szabad/.

Központről) on public data related to the Coronavirus pandemic, while the data provided by the authorities is inconsistent and insufficient. In their view, this further deteriorates the conditions of the operation of the free press, which had already been seriously hindered before. The HCLU also found it highly questionable from a constitutional point of view that the Constitutional Court refused to examine in merits a constitutional complaint submitted by a Member of Parliament in regard to the restrictions on the access to public data during the first lockdown in spring, after the special legal regime was lifted. The CC claimed in its related decision that the matter lost its relevance as the “condition which formed the basis of the complaint no longer existed” and, thus, the complaint lost its relevance. In the opinion of the HCLU, as the CC is free to choose when to decide over constitutional complaints and this way the constitutional scrutiny of any measures introduced during the special legal regime is rendered impossible so long as there could be a period of time (the time of taking its decision) when the measures in question were – at least temporarily – not in force. This way, the restrictive measures in question could be reintroduced as soon as the special regime was announced again in November 2020.

In view of the state of danger, Article 337 of Act C of 2012 on the Criminal Code (hereinafter: Act C of 2012) on "fearmongering" was amended by Article 10 (2) of Act XII of 2020 on the containment of Coronavirus. After the modification, under Article 337 (1) of Act C of 2012, those who spread false news or distorted true news at a site of public danger and in front of a large audience in relation to the public danger which is capable of causing disturbance or unrest shall be punished for committing a crime by imprisonment for up to three years (2020 amendment in italics). Moreover, a new provision, Article 337 (2), was also inserted on fearmongering under special legal orders (such as state of danger), which provide that those, who during the period of a special legal order and in front of a large audience spread false news or distorted true news which are capable of hindering or preventing the efficiency of protection measures, shall be punished for committing a crime by imprisonment of between one to five years. The HHC claimed that the amendments impose unjustified aggravation of related criminal law consequences, while Article 337 (2) is built upon a highly uncertain formulation of the conditions delineating the crime, which could give way to a wide range of excessive interpretations. These questionable conditions include e.g. the concept of “efficiency of protection”, which is just as hard to determine as the level of “hindering” that may trigger criminal proceedings.97

Soon after the entry into force of the amendments (1 April 2020), the case of a local NGO activist living with disabilities in Gyula was reported, whose home was raided in the early morning hours by the police. The police searched his house, confiscated his laptop and smartphone, and he was taken to the local police department for interrogation as a suspect under charges based on Article 337 (1) of Act C of 2020. The charges originated in a Facebook-post, posted in a closed group, in which he claimed, “according to the news, more than 1000 beds will be freed in Gyula citing the pandemic situation, which means sending home dying patients, invalid elders and injured people requiring rehabilitation”. According to the charges, he spread false facts that were capable of disturbing public peace at a site of public danger, without the police giving any explanation as to why they considered the posted facts false or capable of inciting public unrest. Upon the suspect’s complaint against the charges, the local prosecutor office terminated the criminal proceedings due to lack of crime.98 Though the person concerned was acquitted, the HHC remarked that his arrest was reported by the police and received much publicity in the public media and several public media platforms. From the entry into force of the new provisions until June 2020, 134 fearmongering-related criminal proceedings were initiated by the police,99 which – according to the HCLU – were predominantly terminated either by the prosecutor’s office or by the court for lack of crime.100 However, in the HHC’s and the HCLU’s views, the existence and the applicability of such criminal provisions, and then, the launch of such widely publicised criminal proceedings are in themselves capable of inducing a discouraging effect and, thus, 97 Hungarian Helsinki Committee (2020), ‘Scaremongering reloaded’ (Rémhirterjesztés újratölte), 27 March 2020, www.helsinki.hu, available at: https://www.helsinki.hu/remhirterjesztes-ujratoltve/.

can lead to self-censorship of journalists, media platforms and citizens.\textsuperscript{101} However, the CC in a related constitutional complaint procedure found the amendments in line with the Fundamental Law.\textsuperscript{102}

The Hungarian Civil Liberties Union also mentioned, as a negative development, the first GDPR case in Hungary in relation to an investigative article of Magyar Narancs on a private entrepreneur, whose publication in its entirety was prevented by an injunction of the court upon the complaint submitted by the private entrepreneur on the basis of the article revealing sensitive data. The injunction was upheld at second instance too. In HCLU’s view, this practice could also lead to further self-censorship.\textsuperscript{103}

\section*{2 Example(s) of promising practice}

During the Coronavirus pandemic, in May 2020 the Hungarian Helsinki Committee launched its online (roundtable) discussion series, with the participation of related experts. So far, fifteen podcasts were released in relation to current issues, governmental measures, legislative amendments with an impact on human rights’ protection or constitutional values, e.g. four dealing with questions concerning the rule of law in Hungary.\textsuperscript{104} The HHC claimed that, at first during the Coronavirus pandemic, they intended to substitute the former live public roundtable discussions organised by the HHC; however, the podcasts proved to be very successful and had a wider public reach than the live public events. Due to Facebook, the events may be reached later on too, so HHC will consider continuing the series after the end of the pandemic. The costs of the series are not considerable, including Facebook advertisements, which were provided by the HHC’s own resources and the communication budget of other running projects, so they also deem the project sustainable in the future.105

3 Any other developments: withdrawal of state funding for public tasks undertaken by civil actors promoting equality of impoverished segments of society

In late August 2020, it was announced that the state will cut the funding of the educational institutions maintained by civil organisations, like the Dr Ámbédkar School (Dr Ámbédkár Iskola)106, the Real Pearl Foundation (Igazgyöngy Alapítvány)107 or the Hungarian Evangelical Fellowship (Magyarországi Evangéliumi Testvérközösség, hereinafter: HEF).108 In the case of the Real Pearl Foundation and HEF, as of September 2020 (school year of 2020/2021) the state withdrew half of their former funding, while as of September 2021 (school year of 2021/2022) no more state funding will be available for their work. The Dr Ámbédkar School announced that its public education contract expired on 31 August 2020, which the Ministry of Human Resources will not renew, and they will not enter into a new contract either with the school administration, so they lost all government funding around 30,000,000 forints (cc. 84,000 euros) with immediate effect.\textsuperscript{109}

The alleged reasons for these measures and the withdrawal of state support was the crisis situation related to the Coronavirus pandemic, the government not finding the “return of investment” on the work done by HEF “adequate”, while allegedly there were parallel payments in the case of the Real Pearl Foundation.\textsuperscript{110} Contrary to this, the work of the Dr Ámbédkár School, the Real Pearl Foundation and the HEF is renowned, they are considered to play a stop-gap role with their educational and related institutions in the most impoverished segments/regions of society, including children from the poorest social background and/or children with disabilities.\textsuperscript{111} Among others, the Oltalom Charity Association (\textit{Oltalom Karitatív Egyesület}),\textsuperscript{112} which is a civil association closely attached to the HEF and led by HEF’s president, received the European Citizen Award of the European Parliament.\textsuperscript{113} Besides, the HEF and its institutions (including the John Wesley Theological College (\textit{Wesley János Lelkészképző Főiskola}, hereinafter: JWTC) have a strong democratic and social commitment and have publicly confronted the government e.g. on exclusionary social policies, the criminalisation of homelessness, treatment of refugees or academic freedom.\textsuperscript{114} The president of HEF is often asked to participate as a speaker at demonstrations against

According to the president of the HEF, hundreds of students, arriving from the most impoverished segments of society, could finish their studies in their schools, while they also provide family support, social work, mental hygiene support, collection and distribution of donations. For him, it was incomprehensible why these results were not sufficient for the government and it also remained unclear whether their work would be taken over by any other state or civil actor.\footnote{Hvg.hu (2020), ‘The government withdraws complementary funding from the Ivanyi organisations’ schools’ (Megvonja Iványi Gáborék iskoláinak kiegészítő támogatását a kormány), 29 August 2020, available at: https://hvg.hu/itthon/20200829_ivanyi_gabor_magyar_evangeliumi_testverkozosseg_is_kola_ovoda_tobblettamogatas_emmi.} The HEF sees the state’s related actions as part of a series of state measures against them and their institutions due to their conflicts with the state and differing opinion on a number of social and human rights issues.\footnote{Hungarian Evangelical Fellowship (2020), Statement of the president of HEF, 16 October 2020.}

Due to the measures taken by the government, both the HEF and the Real Pearl Foundation abruptly lost half of the state funding related to the public educational tasks they undertook, which practically made the maintenance of their schools impossible, leaving the impoverished, highly vulnerable children under their care in total uncertainty. The loss suffered by HEF in the school year of 2020/2021 reached 95,000,000 forints (263,000 euros), the Real Pearl Foundation received 8,500,000 forints (23,600 euros) instead of 17,000,000 forints (47,200 euros).\footnote{Csendes-Erdei , E. Within a short period of time, the Real Pearl Foundation could collect enough funding to continue its operation and the HEF also collected around 100,000,000 forints (278,000 euros) by mid-October 2020.\footnote{Hungarian Evangelical Fellowship (2020), ‘So far, we’ve received 104 million forints support’ (Eddig 104 millió forinttal támogattak bennünket!), 10 October 2020, available at: https://metegyhaz.hu/2020/10/10/eddig-104-millio-forinttal-tamogattak-bennunket/.}

Note shall be taken that the HEF, which was formerly recognised as a church from 1987 till 1 January 2012, is still having a series of ongoing legal disputes with the state due to the loss of its church status by the repealed Act C of 2011 on the right to freedom of conscience and religion, and on the legal status of churches, denominations and religious communities120 and its practically identical successor: Act CCVI of 2011 on the right to freedom of conscience and religion, and on the legal status of churches, denominations and religious communities (hereinafter: Act CCVI of 2011).121 Despite CC rulings establishing the unconstitutionality of the legislation122 and the judgment rendered by the ECtHR in the Magyar Keresztény Mennonita Egyház and others v. Hungary123 in favour of the applicants, the HEF’s church status has not been restored ever since, and they operate at present as a “religious association”.124 This put the HEF in a difficult position, as only a proper form of “church status” could guarantee the state funding of its social and educational institutions. Since the loss of its church status, the state funding of HEF-related educational institutions had been subject to specific contracts concluded with the state which covered only parts of the related costs. As HEF did not relinquish its institutions and continued to operate them, this under-financing of HEF-maintained institutions led to the accumulation of significant debts towards e.g. public utility services (gas company) and the state tax authority. The state gas company set out to cut off gas services in institutions maintained by HEF in Budapest in September 2020, which was prevented by a blockade set up at the JWTC.125 Finally, the state gas provider agreed to give HEF another six-month delay to pay its debts. However, when the HEF collected around 100,000,000 forints (cc. 285,000 euros) from public support, the state tax authority confiscated all of it in view of HEF’s tax and social security arrears.126 In February 2021, the HEF issued a statement on the state tax authority confiscating another 250,000,000 forints (cc. 714,000 euros) in view of HEF’s tax and social security arrears. Meanwhile, the HEF also claims that the state would be obliged to pay HEF around 6 billion forints. These 6 billion forints (cc. 17,143,000 euros) would consist of those state subsidies and allowances that the HEF – as a church – would have received, among others, from personal income tax offerings of citizens only open to churches or for the maintenance of their social and educational institutions, if HEF had not lost its church status unlawfully.
