Considerable percentage of interviewed journalists believe that migrants, Albanians, Muslims-Bosniaks and other religious minorities are extremly discriminated against. Majority agree that hate speech is present in Serbia. Some journalists share stereotypical and prejudiced views of groups discriminated against, but most of them disagre with such views. Journalists are of view that they are capable of reporting on discrimination but they lack expertise in this field as well as sufficient newsroom for a consistent reporting. Editors believe that discrimination is an important issue to report on, but in practice they prefer other stories with higher ratings.	Survey - quantitative and qualitative research. In addition, key stakeholders and heads of journalists' associations were interviewed and two focus group discussions were organized.	The survey encompassed 164 media representatives dissagregated by the type of media outlet, position, gender, and age. A total of 48% iterviewees worked in print media, 44% worked in broadcast/online outlets, and 8% were from news agencies. Journalists accounted for 54% of the sample, while editors accounted for the remaining 46%.	Not applicable - national level
