Section A: General information on existing situation: probation measures, alternative sanctions and supervision measures as an alternative to pre-trial detention

Please add the information required to answer the questions. Provide supporting or explanatory information – highlighting laws, policies and measures which justify the answer.

Q1. Please outline the specific probation measures or alternative sanctions that are available at the post-trial stage in the Member State on which you are reporting:

Cyprus has transposed the Framework Decision on Alternative Sanctions almost verbatim without adding any additional grounds of refusal beyond those set out in Article 11 of this framework decision.<sup>1</sup>At the same time, however, it has not adopted any procedures nor has it established any mechanisms to render the implementation of this framework decision possible, other than those already foreseen in national legislation in force prior to the transposition of this framework decision. These are set out below.

Probation legislation, community work and conditional release

In respect of offences for which no particular sentence is foreseen in any law, District Courts can issue probation orders placing the offender under the supervision of a probation officer appointed by the Minister of Labour, Welfare and Social Insurance, for a period ranging between one and three years. The probation order may require the offender to comply with any terms including the duty to perform community work without pay for a specified number of hours or to attend educational courses of a specified content and duration. The court will impose the community work requirement only if:

- The offender consents to it;
- The Ministry of Labour, Welfare and Social Insurance can make arrangements for community work in the city or area where the offender resides; and
- The offender is deemed by the court to be suitable for such work, taking into consideration the relevant report of the probation officer.

<sup>1</sup> Cyprus, Law providing for the implementation of the principle of recognition of judicial decisions and decisions for the suspension of the sentence or conditional release for the purpose of supervision of probation measures and alternative sanctions (Νόμος που προνοεί σχετικά με την εφαρμογή της αρχής της αναγνώρισης δικαστικών αποφάσεων και αποφάσεων αναστολής εκτέλεσης της ποινής ή απόλυσης υπό όρους με σκοπό την εποπτεία των μέτρων αναστολής και των εναλλακτικών κυρώσεων) N. 69(I)/2014, 23 May 2014. Available at www.cylaw.org/nomoi/arith/2014\_1\_69.pdf

As an alternative to the probation order, the court may decide not to impose any sentence whatsoever upon an offender who is found guilty of an offence for which no particular sentence is foreseen in any law, or to acquit such an offender on condition that he or she will not commit an offence for a period not exceeding 12 months.<sup>2</sup>

Extra-prison occupation and the electronic bracelet

In Cyprus, prison legislation provides for two types of alternative sanctions for prisoners who have already served part of their sentences:

- The Centre for Guidance and Extra-institutional Occupation of Prisoners, which admits prisoners who are selected as eligible for work or for attending classes in secondary or tertiary education outside the prison.<sup>3</sup> Although the Centre is located within the prison building and is strictly guarded by prison guards, detention conditions are more relaxed to enable the prisoners admitted to it to go out for work or for lessons and return.<sup>4</sup>
- The prisoners admitted to the Centre are also eligible to serve part of their sentence under house arrest, after an electronic device has been fitted onto one of their limbs, usually their left foot, to monitor their movements in order to ensure they do not abscond. To be eligible for this measure, prisoners must have been convicted for non-sexual offences (e.g. rape, abduction of a minor, defilement, promotion to prostitution, intercourse between men under 17)<sup>5</sup>, must have been sentenced to prison for longer than three months and less than four years and must have served at least half of their sentence. The house arrest sanction may range between 15 days and four months.<sup>6</sup> This sanction is discretionary upon the prison authorities and in particular upon a special committee consisting of the prison director, the prison officers, the prison teacher, the prison social worker and the prison psychologist.<sup>7</sup>

These measures do not constitute rights of the prisoners: they are discretionary upon the prison authorities who may decide to grant them using general guidelines which are by no means binding on them.

Periodical imprisonment

A Court which has convicted a person of an offence for which a prison sentence not exceeding three years is foreseen has the power to grant to such person the right to carry out part or all of his or her sentence through a scheme of 'periodical imprisonment' which essentially means spending successive periods in jail starting from Friday night at 8pm until 5am following Monday, at a maximum of 52 weeks.<sup>8</sup> To grant periodical imprisonment, the Court must be satisfied that, in light of the circumstances and the nature of the offence as well as on the basis of a socioeconomic report of the Social Services, the person convicted is suitable for such a measure. The law does not provide an exhaustive list of criteria to be met in order for such right to be granted, but states that one of the factors in favour of granting periodical imprisonment is for the offence to relate to acts of violence in athletic grounds.<sup>9</sup> As such, the measure may be said to target the youth, although older persons being convicted of acts of hooliganism are not excluded from the scope of the law.

Release on parol after having served half of sentence

Prisoners whose sentence exceeded two years of imprisonment and have already served half of their sentence, as well as prisoners who were sentenced to life imprisonment and have served at least 12 years of their sentence, may apply to the prison's parol board to require their conditional release and the serving of their remaining sentence outside the prison under the supervision of a parole officer. The conditions of release imposed by the parole board may include a prohibition of visiting or residing or working in specified areas or fields, prohibition of coming into contact with specified persons or categories of persons, attending programs of rehabilitation from alcohol or drug addiction or another state of dependence that obviously relates to the commission of criminal acts, attendance of a specified program of work or vocational or educational training.<sup>10</sup>

Sanctions for sexual abuse and exploitation of children

The law on sexual abuse of children provides for additional sanctions which may be imposed by the court at any stage of the procedure such as the exclusion from public benefits or grants, the prohibition of commercial trading, the liquidation of companies, the closure of premises used for committing the offence, the prohibition of employment in areas frequented by children, the prohibition of residing with the victim or in a space close to children or frequented by children, the forced acquisition and sale of an object used for committing the offence and the admission of the accused to psychiatric examination and/or treatment.<sup>11</sup> In addition to other sanctions, a person found guilty of sexually abusing a child is liable to pay general and special damages to the victim which may, depending on the facts of the case, be aggravated damages.<sup>12</sup>

Sanctions for trafficking of persons

In addition to prison sentences and fines, the anti-trafficking legislation also provides for the prohibition of professional or commercial activities, the exclusion from public benefits or grants, the liquidation of companies, judicial supervision, the closure of premises used for committing the offence and the forced acquisition and sale of an object used for committing the offence.<sup>13</sup>

Q2. Please outline the specific supervision measures as alternatives to pre-trial detention that are available in the Member State:

There are no alternatives to pre-trial detention in Cyprus; an accused person is either detained before the trial or released with or without conditions. A judge issuing a warrant for the arrest of any person accused of an offence which is not punishable with death can order that the person arrested be released upon entering a bail bond to secure his or her appearance in Court at the next hearing and. In such a case the police are compelled to release the accused person immediately upon entering the bond.<sup>14</sup> The Court may require the bail bond to be executed with or without sureties and the person who is required to execute the bail bond may be permitted to deposit with the Accountant-General of the state a sum of money determined by the Court in lieu of executing such a bond.<sup>15</sup> The Court may order a person released on bail to sign a new bond for a bigger amount or order such person to produce additional sureties, failing which the Court may commit the released person to prison.<sup>16</sup> The Court may revoke the release of the accused person and order his or her arrest and detention where information is submitted to Court on oath that such person is about to leave the country.<sup>17</sup> The constitution allows pre-trial detention of both adults and minors for the purpose of bringing them before the competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence or when it is reasonably considered necessary to prevent them from committing an offence or from fleeing after having done so. A person may be detained for 24 hours without a court order before being presented in court.<sup>18</sup> If the police convince the judge before whom a suspect is presented that the investigation of the crime for which the suspect was arrested has not been completed, the judge may order the detention of the suspect for a period not exceeding eight days at a time,<sup>19</sup> at a maximum of three months.<sup>20</sup> If the judge is not satisfied that the suspect ought to be detained, then s/he will order the suspect's release with or without conditions. If the pre-trial detention proves to be unlawful, the persons detained are entitled to a speedy release and to compensation.<sup>21</sup>

In cases of sexual abuse of children, upon the application of a family member of the abused child or the police or the Attorney General or the social worker appointed as counsellor to the child, the court may issue a temporary exclusion or removal order against the accused, whenever there is evidence of a prima facie risk of violence or repetition of the offence or it is necessary to protect the victim.<sup>22</sup> Exclusion and removal orders are also foreseen by the domestic violence legislation, issued by the court against persons suspected of domestic violence, upon an application from the victim's family, the police, the prosecutor of the case, the Attorney General or the family counsellor appointed by the Social Services.<sup>23</sup>

Q3. Are there any specific legislative or policy developments regarding alternatives to prison (at the pre- and post-trial stage) of particular suspects/sentenced persons (such as children, persons with disabilities, persons in need of special treatment or mothers with young children)?

There are no alternatives to prison for vulnerable suspects/prisoners. Children, mothers with young children and persons with disabilities or medical problems may either be detained both at the pre- and at the post-trial stage, or they may be released, with or without conditions. The Constitution provides that a person may be arrested and detained for the purpose of bringing him or her before the competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence or when it is reasonably considered necessary to prevent his or her committing an offence or fleeing after having done so,<sup>24</sup> and the judge may release such person with or without condition or remand him or her in custody for a period not exceeding eight days.<sup>25</sup> There is no legal requirement that the Court is under a duty to take into account any characteristics or special needs of the person accused; it is up to the judge to decide whether a person's special needs or circumstances warrant a release or not and what conditions are attached to their release or their detention. In recent years, criticism and practice as regards the detention of women, children and persons with intellectual or psychosocial disorder have somewhat restricted the Court's wide discretion afforded by the Constitution. These are summarised below.

Persons with intellectual/psychosocial disorder

The Criminal Code does not foresee any special treatment for persons with intellectual disabilities; if found guilty, persons with intellectual disability can receive a prison sentence at the maximum foreseen by law. If the prison authorities decide that their degree of vulnerability is such, persons with intellectual disability may be detained separately in a place within the prison which is better monitored. Persons who are assessed by the prison psychiatrist to be in need of special handling and increased monitoring, either due to impulsive behaviour or low perception or otherwise, are detained in Ward 4, which is the wing designated for persons in need of monitoring. When the prison psychiatrist finds that a prisoner's psychological condition is vulnerable, the prisoner is placed in the new Ward 10, which houses the Health Centre for detainees with mental health problems. However, beyond these intra-institutional arrangements, no alternative is offered to prisoners or suspects who are at increased risk of exploitation or of humiliating treatment, such as persons with an intellectual disability. An on-site investigation carried out by the Ombudsman in 2014 into the case of a particular prisoner with an intellectual disability serving a prison sentence, revealed that by general admission of all competent authorities<sup>26</sup> the prison is not a suitable place for offenders with an intellectual disability;<sup>27</sup> yet by the time of writing, no alternative arrangements were put in place for vulnerable suspects or prisoners.

For persons suffering from serious psychosocial disorders which necessitate medical treatment, the court may issue an order of psychiatric treatment in an institution in lieu of a prison sentence except in cases of persons convicted of first degree murder or other offence for which a particular sentence is required by law.<sup>28</sup> The criterion used by the Court to decide whether or not to order the institutionalisation of a suspect with a psychosocial disorder is whether the suspect is able to follow the Court proceedings or not. If the Courts find that the suspects cannot follow the proceedings, then they may adjourn the hearing and order the institutionalisation of the suspects in a state institution for successive periods of four months at a time, at the end of which the suspects' ability to follow the trial will be re-assessed by the Courts until their condition allows them to follow the judicial procedure.<sup>29</sup>

Transgender persons

In 2013, following recommendations from the national equality body,<sup>30</sup> the police has issued guidelines to its members on how to treat transgender persons in pre-trial detention. Among others, the guidelines provide details on how to conduct bodily search of transgender persons and require that transgender persons be detained separately but not in conditions of isolation.<sup>31</sup>

Women

Women are always detained separately from men. The scheme of open prison, the Centre for Guidance and Extra-institutional Occupation of Prisoners and the electronic bracelet foreseen under the prison law<sup>32</sup> are not available to women due to lack of space and organisational arrangements. The exclusion of women from these schemes attracted criticism from the Equality Body in 2010<sup>33</sup> but continued to remain unresolved at the time of writing.<sup>34</sup>

Children

In Cyprus, children under the age of 14 do not have criminal liability and are therefore not prosecuted.<sup>35</sup> Children aged 14+ can be prosecuted and may be detained both at the pre-trial and at the post trial stage, following the same procedure as for adults and by the same Court as adults, as there are no juvenile courts. A number of considerations are taken into account in order for the Court to issue a warrant for a child's arrest and detention. Primarily, the Court must be satisfied that there is a risk that the child will not appear for the trial. The seriousness of the offence, the child's ability to influence witnesses and the chances of securing a conviction are also taken into consideration by the Court in order to decide on the issue of detention. Where a person apparently under the age of sixteen is arrested and cannot be brought immediately before a Court, a police officer not below the rank of sergeant or the police officer in charge of the police station to whom such person is brought may decide to release the child on a recognisance, with or without sureties. If a surety is required, then the amount must be such so that, in the opinion of the police, it will secure the attendance of the child in Court. Children will not be released where the charges concern homicide or other grave crime, or it is necessary in the interest of the children to remove them from association with any undesirable person, or the police officer has reason to believe that their release would defeat the ends of justice. If the arrested children are not released on a recognisance, the police will detain them until they are brought before a Court.<sup>36</sup> The Court may order children to be placed in custody in a police station for the period of the remand or until the trial. Whilst in police custody, the police must make arrangements for preventing, so far as is practicable, a detained minor in custody in a police station from associating with an adult, other than a relative, charged with an offence.<sup>37</sup> Children deemed to be of 'unruly' or 'depraved' character and cannot be suitably detained in a police station, will be committed to prison,<sup>38</sup> to be detained in a special section where young persons (aged 18-22) are detained. If convicted, young persons are serving their sentences in a specially designated section of the prison. Children are always kept separately from adults, both at the pre-trial and at the post-trial stage.<sup>39</sup>

Probation order

The Court can issue an order of probation, placing an accused child or adult under the supervision of a probation officer appointed by the Social Welfare Services for a period specified in the court order, which cannot be less than a year or longer than three years.<sup>40</sup> The choice of the conditions of probation is at the Court's discretion: it can include the condition of educational lessons,<sup>41</sup> for which there is currently no system in place to implement, or the condition of community work without pay.<sup>42</sup> The possibility of attaching the community work requirement to the probation bears a number of advantages for children, for whom this may be the first structured experience of productive work which may in the medium and long term help the children towards a more smooth integration to the labour market, whilst at the same time provide therapeutic occupation that can contribute to the prevention of anti-social behaviour.

Order for conditional or unconditional discharge

When a Court convicting a person of an offence is of the opinion that under the circumstances the imposition of a sentence or the issue of a probation order is not expedient, the Court has discretion to discharge the accused unconditionally or on the condition that the accused will not commit an offence for a period not exceeding 12 months from the issue of the order. In the event that the conditions of the discharge are breached, the discharge no longer applies and the offender will be punished for the offence for which the discharge order was issued.<sup>43</sup>
