Introduction

Although arrivals of migrants and refugees to the European Union (EU) by sea are decreasing, the Mediterranean remains one of the world's deadliest migration routes.

At least 1,430 people died or went missing while attempting to cross the Mediterranean during the first six months of 2026, according to the International Organization for Migration (IOM). The first six weeks of 2026 marked the deadliest start of the year in the Mediterranean since IOM began collecting data in 2014 (see FRA, Migration and fundamental rights bulletin – 1/2026).

The IOM recorded over 35,000 dead or missing migrants in the Mediterranean between 2014 and mid-2026. These figures are likely an underestimation, due to underreporting and limited official data. The data denote that search and rescue (SAR) capacity at sea is not sufficient to respond effectively to the great number of migrants and refugees trying to reach Europe on unseaworthy boats.

Respect for fundamental rights in the context of SAR operations also requires adherence to the principle of non-refoulement. It bans Member States from returning rescued migrants to a risk of persecution, torture or other serious harm.

Such risk is particularly high in Libya. A February 2026 report on human rights violations against migrants and refugees in Libya by the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Support Mission in Libya called for a moratorium on interceptions at sea and returns to Libya until adequate human rights safeguards are put in place. Still, the number of migrants intercepted by Libya at sea and brought back to Libyan ports increased from 21,800 in 2024 to 27,000 in 2025, according to IOM's 11-17 January 2026 weekly update.

EU Member States on the other side of the Mediterranean have supported Libya in strengthening its SAR capacity for the past several years. The United Nations Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights of Migrants recommended in August 2025 that cooperation agreements should strengthen the SAR regime. He noted that they must also include safe disembarkation of rescued people in accordance with international human rights and refugee law.

The European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR), in S.S. and Others v. Italy (No. 21660/18, 20 May 2025), examined the financial and logistical support provided by Italy to Libya in managing immigration. It found that this support did not trigger its responsibility for the alleged ill-treatment of migrants whom the Libyan coastguards rescued in international waters. It also concluded that the Italian Maritime Rescue Coordination Centre in Rome – which allowed a Libyan ship to carry out the rescue operation – did not have control over the Libyan crew's conduct. Though it was noted that refugees and migrants in Libya were at risk of torture, slavery and discrimination, in this specific case, Italy, lacked effective control over the persons concerned. The ECtHR found the case inadmissible.

The nature of the law relating to cooperation with third countries in border management is continuously evolving. As a result, FRA published practical guidance in 2016 for Member States on how to mitigate the risk of being held accountable for violations of the principle of non-refoulement. The guidance focuses on border management situations where the responsibility for possible violations of fundamental rights is unclear. This particularly includes activities that are carried out with the assistance of third countries.

The European Border and Coast Guard Agency (Frontex) operates small airplanes and drones for maritime surveillance over the high sea of the Central Mediterranean. When it spots a boat with migrants in distress, it informs the relevant maritime rescue coordination centres in both the EU and the responsible third countries. Depending on the incident location, this may trigger a rescue by the Libyan coast guard and disembarkation in Libya.

To mitigate the risk of Frontex being found in violation of the non-refoulement principle, the Frontex fundamental rights officer proposed, among other things, that information on sightings also be transferred to non-governmental organisation (NGO) SAR vessels in the vicinity (see Frontex, 2023 Annual report of the fundamental rights officer, at 1.7). In his 2025 annual report, the fundamental rights officer informed that Frontex's sharing of sightings with third countries accused of committing serious human rights violations against migrants continued to be an issue of serious concern.

NGOs deploying SAR vessels informed FRA that they increasingly receive alerts from Frontex. The fundamental rights officer deploys fundamental rights monitors to the Frontex operation room in charge of maritime surveillance. The monitors advise Frontex on how to act in compliance with fundamental rights.

SAR vessels deployed by NGOs in the Central Mediterranean continue to play a life-saving role. They rescue migrants and refugees in emergency situations at sea and bring them to a safe port, in most cases in Italy. At sea, NGOs are increasingly exposed to use of force by Libyan authorities for not following their orders to stop the rescue as soon as Libyan vessels arrive or to bring the rescued migrants to Libya. Examples of such incidents involved the vessels Ocean Viking in August 2025, Sea-Watch 5 in September 2025 and May 2026 as well as the Louise Michel in December 2025. An alliance of 13 NGOs, the Justice Fleet, declared in November 2025 not to follow orders by the Libyan coast guard, which they deemed contrary to international law.

NGO SAR vessels continue to face administrative and criminal proceedings in the EU. In July 2025, a coalition of 32 NGOs denounced the systematic obstruction of their SAR operations which has resulted in fines and the administrative detention of their vessels in Italian ports.

This FRA update provides an overview of the administrative and criminal proceedings against NGOs engaged in SAR activities in the Central Mediterranean.

FRA has been issuing such annual overviews since 2018. The report series reflects broader concerns about shrinking civic space, as highlighted in FRA's 2026 civic space update and specifically concerning SAR actors in FRA's 2023 civic space report.

This update is compiled based on desk research and information FRA received from NGOs deploying SAR vessels and reconnaissance aircraft. Public sources are hyperlinked. All links were checked on 20 July 2026.

The report covers only the Central Mediterranean. The other example in Europe, where civil society rescues migrants and refugees in distress at sea, is the English Channel. There, the Royal National Lifeboat Institution (RNLI) –a 200-year-old British charity established to save lives at sea– carries out rescue operations to assist people possibly in danger at sea when tasked by the British Coastguard. The RNLI is not facing any legal proceedings for their rescue work, unlike NGOs deploying SAR vessels in the Mediterranean. This shows that a different approach and attitude is possible.

1. International and EU legal framework on search and rescue at sea

Assisting people in distress at sea is a duty of all states and shipmasters under international law. Core provisions of search and rescue (SAR) at sea are set out in the 1974 International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS), the 1979 International Convention on Maritime Search and Rescue (SAR Convention) and the 1982 United Nations (UN) Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS).

In general, the shipmaster of any vessel (both private and governmental) has an obligation to render assistance to those in distress at sea without regard for their nationality, status or the circumstances in which they are found. A rescue operation terminates only when survivors are delivered to a 'place of safety'. This should be determined by taking into account the particular circumstances of the case, as specified by the 2004 amendments to the SAR Convention, adopted by the International Maritime Organization (IMO). Malta was the only Mediterranean EU Member State not to accede to the convention.

The IMO Guidelines on the treatment of persons rescued at sea further specify that a 'place of safety' is 'a place where the survivors' safety is no longer threatened and where their basic human needs (such as food, shelter and medical needs) can be met'. The appendix to the guidelines recalls the prohibition of refoulement. Disembarkation must, thus, be avoided in places where refugees and asylum seekers are at risk persecution, torture or other serious harm.

In May 2026, the IMO, the UN Refugee Agency (UNHCR) and the International Chamber of Shipping issued a revised guidance on rescue at sea in the context of refugees and migrants. It complements the 2022 Joint Statement on Place of Safety by UN entities and the 2018 UN Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration (Objective 8).

Under Article 3 of the European Border and Coast Guard Regulation, SAR at sea is one of the components of European integrated border management. For maritime border surveillance operations coordinated by Frontex, the EU Sea Borders Regulation (Regulation \(EU\) No. 656/2014) incorporates the obligation to render assistance at sea and to rapidly identify a place of safety where rescued people can be disembarked. This must be done in compliance with fundamental rights and the principle of non-refoulement.

These two EU law instruments prohibit disembarkation of rescued persons in a country where there is a risk of torture or ill-treatment, irrespective of any request for asylum by the rescued individuals. Under Article 5 of the Screening Regulation \(EU\) 2024/1356, people disembarked after a SAR operation must be channelled into screening at the external border to verify their identity, assess if they pose a security risk and examine medical or other vulnerabilities.

The duty to fully respect the right to life set out in Article 2 of both the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights (the Charter) and the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) as well as to save lives at sea rests primarily with EU Member States. These core obligations cannot be circumvented under any circumstance, including for external border control.

In Safi v. Greece (7 July 2022, No. 5418/15), the ECtHR clarified that Article 2 of the ECHR requires that states take preventive operational measures to protect individuals in distress at sea whose lives are at risk. The UN Human Rights Committee echoed the same duty in its General Comment No. 36 on the right to life (2019).

The European Commission Recommendation \(EU\) 2020/1365 on cooperation among Member States concerning SAR operations carried out by private vessels encourages Member States to ensure rapid disembarkation of rescued people in a place of safety. Such place of safety should guarantee their fundamental rights, in conformity with the Charter and the principle of non-refoulement.

Directive 2009/16/EC (last amended in 2024), which intends to address substandard shipping, also regulates port controls of ships. In August 2022, in the Sea Watch case (Joined Cases C-14/21 and C-15/21) the Court of Justice of the EU clarified that the port state may inspect SAR ships operated by humanitarian organisations. They may also seize such vessels, but only in the event of a clear risk to safety, health or the environment.

2. Non-governmental organisation assets involved in search and rescue operations

Italy's Mare Nostrum rescue programme in the Central Mediterranean ended in 2014. Non-governmental organisations (NGOs) have since been deploying search and rescue (SAR) vessels and reconnaissance aircraft to assist and rescue migrants and asylum seekers in distress at sea.

The Migrant Offshore Aid Station deployed the first vessel, Phoenix, in August 2014. Since then, NGOs have deployed 49 rescue vessels and seven reconnaissance aircraft – both active and retired – primarily in the Central Mediterranean.

Figure 1 provides an overview of vessels and aircraft deployed by NGOs between August 2014 and 30 June 2026. The below figure also indicates if assets are operational or stopped working and whether they were or are subject to legal proceedings.

Figure 1 – Non-governmental organisation assets involved in search and rescue operations in the Mediterranean Sea, August 2014 – 30 June 2026

Alternative text: The figure lists the names of the 21 vessels and five aircraft which were operational on 30 June 2026 (one of the 21 vessels was under maintenance). It also lists the 28 SAR vessels and two aircraft active in the past but not operational anymore in June 2026. For each of them, it shows whether they had legal proceedings (past or ongoing).

Source: FRA (2026), based on public sources and civil society input.

By the end of June 2026, there were 21 operational NGO vessels and five operational reconnaissance aircraft. One of the vessels, the Oyvon, was under maintenance. This is a small increase compared to 2025. In last year's update, FRA reported that 17 vessels and three reconnaissance aircraft were operational. In addition, three NGOs announced the deployment of new vessels: Humanity 2, Lifeline SAR and Thetis II.

Reconnaissance aircraft conduct maritime monitoring activities, which support the early detection of distress cases and alerts competent authorities. They do not themselves engage in SAR.

3. Measures against non-governmental organisations involved in search and rescue operations

Since 2017, Germany, Italy, Malta, the Netherlands and Spain have initiated 105 administrative or criminal proceedings affecting search and rescue (SAR) operations by civil society actors. 19 of these have occurred since 1 June 2025, when FRA issued its last update. Annex 1 lists the ongoing and closed administrative and criminal proceedings against non-governmental organisation (NGO) rescue vessels, aircraft and/or their crew members. FRA reviewed and updated the list based on publicly available sources and communication with civil society actors.

Such criminal proceedings and administrative measures against deployed vessels—like blocking ships in ports for contravening national law—hinder SAR missions. They also have a chilling effect on SAR operations as they divert NGOs away from their objective. This forces them to waste time and resources, as emphasized in the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe 2025 report Saving the lives of migrants at sea and protecting their human rights (point 3.6).

Table 1 shows that almost two out of three vessels deployed since 2017 have faced legal proceedings (30 out of 49).

Table 1 – Assets deployed by civil society: legal proceedings in EU Member States, 2017 – 30 June 2026
	Vessels which faced legal proceedings	Vessels which faced no legal proceedings	Aircraft which faced legal proceedings	Aircraft which faced no legal proceedings	Total
Operational assets*	13	8	2	3	26
Non-operational assets	17	11	1	1	30
Total assets	30	19	3	4	56

*Note: includes the vessel Oyvon under maintenance in Sicily. FRA (2026), based on public sources and civil society input.

The legal proceedings listed in Table 1 were mainly initiated in Italy. In the past, some procedures occurred also in Germany, Malta, the Netherlands and Spain.

Since June 2025, 19 new legal cases were opened, all in Italy. Most procedures concern measures against SAR vessels. They usually involve fines of 2,000 to 10,000 EUR and the temporary blocking of vessels in ports for periods of 20 or 60 days. None of the operational NGO vessels were detained or blocked in a port on 30 June 2026.

Since 2023, most measures against SAR vessels are based on Italy's Decree-Law No. 1/2023, converted into Law No. 15/2023. This legislation imposes the obligation for SAR vessels to proceed to designated ports, often distant from rescue areas. It requires that SAR vessels proceed immediately to the assigned port after each rescue. This, thereby, limits their ability to rescue other groups of people in distress over the course of several days.

The legislation was amended in December 2024, with Decree-Law No. 145/2024, converted into Law No. 187/2024. These amendments impose new reporting obligations on the Italian maritime rescue coordination centre for SAR aircraft. If not respected, a fine of between 2,000 and 10,000 EUR could be imposed on the operating entity and the aircraft could be detained. The new rules also reduce the deadline to appeal the administrative detention of vessels and aircraft from 60 to 10 days.

Fewer than one in five measures concern criminal proceedings against the staff working for NGOs deploying the vessels or against the crew. However, this trend may be changing. In May 2026, Italy opened a criminal investigation against the captain of the Sea-Watch 5 for aiding and abetting unauthorised immigration. According to information available at FRA, this is the first criminal procedure opened against staff working for NGO-deployed SAR vessels since the case against crew members of the Mare Jonio in 2021.

In May 2024, the Italian Civil Aviation Authority issued five decisions banning civil society deployed reconnaissance aircraft from taking off for search operations at sea from five airports in Sicily: Lampedusa, Palermo Bocca di Falco, Palermo Punta Raisi, Pantelleria, and Trapani. In August 2025, Italian authorities detained Seabird 1. In September 2025, the Italian Civil Aviation Authority imposed a fine of 100,000 EUR and a detention order of 20 days on the aircraft Colibri 2. The penalty was for not having immediately alerted the Libyan and Tunisian coast guards when spotting boats in distress in their respective search and rescue zone.

Most closed cases ended with an acquittal, the release of the confiscated or detained vessel, or were discontinued due to lack of evidence. In some cases, NGOs agreed to pay a fine and waited until the authorities allowed their vessel to leave the port. While many of these proceedings do not result in convictions, such legal actions may have a deterrent effect on humanitarian activities.

In Ten years of rescue in the Central Mediterranean (2026), SOS Méditerranée describes a continued deterioration of the operational environment for civil society SAR. This includes administrative restrictions, distant port assignments, and vessel detentions.

The NGO Sea Watch counted that from 2023 to June 2026, the Italian authorities issued over 40 detention orders against NGO rescue vessels. This amounted to 1,075 days of detention. According to a report issued by the NGO EMERGENCY, its Life Support vessel had to sail more than 10,000 additional kilometres to reach assigned ports, including in Central and Northern Italy.

The first national court rulings against the blocking of ships in ports based on Law No. 15/2023 was handed down in June 2024. Since then, as described in Annex 1, the following Italian courts found the blocking of NGO rescue ships at port to be unlawful and annulled the related fines: in Agrigento, Ancona, Catania, Catanzaro, Chieti, Crotone, Genoa, Reggio Calabria, Rome, Trapani, and Vibo Valentia. Several courts issued interim measures suspending the administrative detention of SAR vessels.

In February 2025, the Italian Supreme Court of Cassation (order 17687/2024) clarified that SAR responsibility includes organising disembarkation 'within the shortest reasonably possible time' at a place of safety. Considerations related to migration management cannot override these obligations.

The Italian Constitutional Court (judgement 101/2025) upheld the constitutionality of the legislative provisions regulating civil society SAR operations in July 2025. However, they clarified that their implementation must comply with international maritime law and fundamental rights. This includes the duty to render assistance to persons in distress at sea.

In 2025, developments occurred also in relation to Malta. A March 2025 case in Malta involved 32 people stranded near the Miskar gas platform on the border of the Tunisian and Maltese SAR zones. The UN Human Rights Committee (HRC) responded by issuing interim measures evoking Malta's duties under international law to conduct SAR operations. The individuals were ultimately rescued that same day by the rescue vessel Aurora, operated by Sea-Watch. The HRC reaffirmed Malta's duty under Articles 6 and 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to protect the right to life and prevent inhuman treatment. They requested Malta to promptly coordinate rescue and ensure disembarkation in a place of safety.

In March 2026, the HRC issued further interim measures. They asked Malta to coordinate a SAR operation for more than 100 people stranded on the same Miskar gas platform. The individuals were subsequently rescued on 19 March by the NGO ship Ocean Viking. This marked the third set of interim measures concerning Malta in 12 months. Prior, in September 2025, the HRC issued an order requiring Malta and Italy to coordinate the rescue of 41 survivors stranded aboard a gas platform supply vessel.

No NGO is deploying SAR vessels in Greece. Pursuant to Article 40 of Law 4825/2021, deploying SAR vessels in the area of responsibility of the Hellenic Coast Guard requires their prior authorisation. Organisations that act without authorisation may be fined up to 6,000 EUR. Each person involved in the mission may also be fined up to 1,000 EUR. In addition, they may be sanctioned with imprisonment of one year (or of a minimum of three years if their actions cause an accident), without prejudice to stricter penalties based on other applicable provisions (Article 40). The new legal migration law 5275/2026 adopted in February 2026 further restricts civil society's activities.

Conclusion

In Preventing and responding to deaths at sea: What the European Union can do (2023), FRA identified six action areas to prevent deaths at sea. These included strengthening search and rescue (SAR) capacities, ensuring effective investigations into shipwrecks, improving protection for survivors and more legal pathways to the EU.

To fill the SAR gap, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe adopted Resolution 2612 \(2025\) on 26 June 2025. It called on states to re-establish large-scale European SAR operations and suggested European SAR corps be dedicated to preserving lives at sea, while respecting human rights. A policy report issued in June 2026, Saving lives at sea: Towards a common European approach to search and rescue in the Mediterranean, outlines options for a coordinated European framework for SAR in the Mediterranean.

For many years FRA has been drawing attention to the need for a clear legal distinction between humanitarian assistance and migrant smuggling, as regards measures against non-governmental organisations supporting migrants and refugees (see FRA, Criminalisation of migrants in an irregular situation and of persons engaging with them).

EU Member States should ensure that measures to combat migrant smuggling do not lead to the criminalisation of those enforcing the human rights imperative of saving lives at sea, acting out of humanitarian considerations or following international legal obligations on rescue at sea. The ongoing revision of Directive 2002/90/EC on the facilitation of unauthorised entry, transit and residence provides an opportunity to clarify that humanitarian assistance should not be criminalised.

The Pact on the Mediterranean (the Pact), issued by the European Commission in October 2025, embeds migration into a broader framework for cooperation in the Mediterranean region. It promotes a whole-of-route as well as a rights-based approach to migration management. This includes providing solutions to ensure the protection of migrants and refugees along the routes. The Pact does not cover search and rescue at sea. However, the EU and its Member States could use it to trigger actions to improve the protection space in the region, reducing the dangerous sea crossings.

The 75th anniversary of the 1951 Refugee Convention in 2026 is not only a reminder that one of the biggest fundamental rights issues in Europe remains unresolved. It should also encourage the EU and its Member States to take action to reduce fatalities at sea.

Annex: Legal proceedings by EU Member States against civil society actors involved in search and rescue operations in the Mediterranean Sea (Update June 2026)

This Annex provides an overview of administrative and criminal proceedings initiated by EU Member States against search and rescue (SAR) assets – vessels or reconnaissance aircraft – and/or their crew. It starts with procedures initiated in Italy, followed by Germany, Malta, the Netherlands, and Spain. It lists both ongoing and closed proceedings known to FRA.

The Annex reflects information from 2017 until 30 June 2026. The legal proceedings are listed in reverse chronological order, based on the date when each proceeding was initiated. The information and sources compiled in this Annex are based on desk research, as well as information received from NGOs deploying SAR vessels and aircraft. Open proceedings on which FRA could not obtain updates are marked as pending, although some of them may meanwhile have been closed.
